

Dear Recruiting Manager,

I am applying for the position of an entry level game programmer. I saw this opportunity on your website and I feel this is the perfect role for me. I have the right to work in the UK till 2024.

I have recently completed a Masters in Computer Games Technology at the University of Abertay. In 2016, I obtained my degree in BSc in Business and IT from the University of Malta. My thesis was focused on network security, where I developed an IPS prototype on Ubuntu. The last few months before I decided to read for a Masters, I was also working in tandem with QA and development teams to enhance an existing product feature for the Acunetix scanner. During these last three years, I have also kept myself busy by completing short courses to further expand my knowledge in various areas of research. I have completed LPIC-1, CCNA, and two short courses on Unity design and development. I was always passionate about video games and interested to understand the development process. I wanted to specialise in games development and shift my career to the games industry. During these last few years, I followed several game related media channels such as Kotaku, PCGamer, RockPaperShotgun and GamesRadar to understand the current industry and keep up to date with the latest trends. I also follow several updates from Twitter, as it is the platform of choice for the gaming community.

As I have worked within small teams during my postgraduate and game jams, I wore many hats and fulfilled my responsibilities not only in the role assigned but also as a leader in the team. I share a passion and love for making games as well. I have spent countless hours in GTA starting from San Andreas on PS2, SA:MP on PC and moving to GTA V where I spent hundreds of hours on online multiplayer. I really enjoyed playing the heists especially with friends as we were able to communicate, plan ahead and get richer together to show off apartments, businesses and yachts. I have also played Bully on PS2 as it was an interesting concept which I hope we will see more of in the coming years.

To summarise, I am really looking forward to joining the team at Rockstar. I will go all the way to support the team, and ensure that milestone deadlines are being met. I have proven time and again that I am able to deliver on time and as requested. I am able to recognise challenges and schedule resources to overcome them. I am a problem solver with a can-do attitude, where I believe that persistence is the key to great results. Hideo Kojima and Sean Murray are great inspirations. Kojima worked in the film industry before switching over to gaming and Sean managed to turn around the biggest disaster in gaming history, by listening to feedback, working on it and letting his work speak for itself.

Yours Sincerely,

Daniel Zammit
